

Media Coverage from 2007

"I've done some charity CDs before but this one is special; it's a wonderful project with choral groups from a town that is one of the most culturally rich in the nation; it was a pleasure to be involved." – John Baker, Recording Engineer, Town Topics, November 21, 2007

"Princeton University is proud to be part of this remarkable grassroots initiative to help the children of Africa. The music is enchanting and inspirational, and the message of hope and love is immensely powerful." – Shirley A. Tilgham, President of Princeton University, The Trenton Times, December 1, 2007

"Some of the highlights of A Princeton Christmas include the American Boychoir's recording of "In the Bleak Midwinter," understated but moving, and simply beautiful. So is the tender rendition of "This Christmastide (Jessye's Carol)," done by the Tartantones. There are several exquisite performances by the Princeton University Chapel Choir, but "Nativity Carol" especially stands out. The Princeton Girlchoir's cheerful version of "Let it Snow! Let it Snow! Let it Snow!" is special because it was done live on NBC's Today Show in December of 2002. But really, it's all good — there isn't a disappointing track on the entire CD." — Susan Van Dongen, Princeton Packet, December 5, 2007

"Those burned out by Christmas marketing overload should listen to the first track on this CD -- a spirit-raising version of "The First Nowell" by the Princeton University Choir, singing the Vaughan Williams arrangement in a December 2001 concert. It's the first of many beautiful moments on this disc assembled in Princeton for the best of reasons -- to raise money to feed the less fortunate. Proceeds from album sales (either CDs from princetonchristmas.org or downloads via iTunes) will go to the United Nations' World Food Program." – Bradley Bambarger, The Star-Ledger, December 5, 2007
